The subcombinations are distinct from each other if they are shown to be separately usable. In the instant case, invention I has separate utility such as a method to recognizes the shape of a scribble/handrawn/handwritten by the combination of steps in determine point (claimed broadly), closed figure loop, straight sides or curved sides and recognizing the spline of scribble. Invention II has separate utility such as specifically focus on determine a new point (claimed specifically) on the postulated line from the given first point and second point. Thus, invention II have a completely separate utility because it is not necessarily used in determining the shape of handwriting. See MPEP § 806.05(c and d).
